Freshwater Science

Major description
Freshwater science is designed to give you a broad perspective on inland waters. Students study aquatic chemistry, hydrology, aquatic organisms, and the health of aquatic ecosystems.

The program concentrates on understanding the science behind emerging environmental issues facing society using an interdisciplinary approach. Emerging issues include: land-use and water interactions, toxicants in the aquatic environment, and potential effects of global climate change on aquatic environments and water resources.

Program highlights
In the fourth year of the program, students undertake an individual project in their area of interest, and participate in a group research project under the direction of the project coordinator.

Register in courses such as:
- EESC 402 — Freshwater Resources
- EESC 435 — Applied Fluvial Geomorphology Field Techniques

Your career options
Career options range from aquaculturist and ecologist to water manager and fisheries specialist.
Visit the Freshwater Science webpage and scroll down to the “Your Career Options” heading for more employment information.
